

Arkansas Times February 10, 2005

Restaurant Reviewers (Reader Review)

After reading your review of the new Saddle Creek Woodfired Grill in North Little Rock (Jan 20), my wife and I decided to venture into their world of food and drink. I must say that we were not disappointed!

We are quite picky when it comes to service in a restaurant. Living in Germany for the last three years has caused us to become even more critical about the quality of the food, the service and the overall experience.

Now that you have a clue where we're coming from, I need to rave about our experience and pass it along to others.

The atmosphere — warm, rich, inviting, relaxing. The gas logs flickering in the fireplace and the soft, warm glow of the overhead lights on the rich wood furniture and architecture draw you into this almost "cozy" place.

The service — excellent! Will, a combat veteran of the war in Iraq (with the help of his colleagues), attended to our every need.

The food — excellent again!

The fine folks at Saddle Creek certainly made an impression on this picky, hard-to-please, spoiled couple. Dining there is a true delight.

Marc Lovelace
North Little Rock